A Wellington man, who witnessed the lynching of Jay Lynch in Lamar, Mo., recently after describing the affair in detail and remarking that none of the mob members wore masks, was asked by a Wellington News reporter whether he could recognize any of the lynchers now if occasion demanded. "Well, I might recognize them over here in sunny Kansas," he replied, "but in Lamar the light is bad."—Kansas City Star.

Why Sam Don't Want 'Em To Vote.

Senator Sam B. Cook vigorously opposed the adoption of the woman suffrage measure at the last session of the legislature. The Senator's hostility to the sacred cause was well known to the women agitators, and many and varied were the efforts to win him over, but all such efforts were futile. After the session adjourned Senator Cook was spending a few days at Excelsior Springs, when the topic of female suffrage arose at an impromptu social gathering in one of the hotels. A Kansas suffragette was present, but the fact was unknown to the Missourian. The women were pressing him rather closely for reasons for his opposition, and he finally told them. "When women get to voting they will also go to holding office," said he "and for my part, I don't want to go home at night in doubt as to whether I am crawling into bed with the township constable or a justice of the peace."

"Hum!" one of the innocents exclaimed; "I didn't know there was any difference between a constable and a justice of peace."

At this point the Kansas suffragette fled precipitately, and the meeting broke up without formal adjournment.—Mosby's Message.
